Handwritten text in Arabic script, likely a manuscript or a collection of letters. The text is dense and covers most of the page, with some marginalia. The script is cursive and characteristic of the Ottoman or Persian periods. There are several large, bold letters or words that stand out, possibly indicating the start of new sections or important terms. The text is written on a light-colored background, and the ink is dark, making it legible despite the cursive style. The overall layout is a single column of text, with some lines being longer than others, creating a slightly irregular flow. The handwriting is consistent throughout, suggesting it was written by a single scribe. There are no illustrations or other markings on the page.

Handwritten text in Persian script, likely a manuscript or legal document. The text is dense and covers the entire page, with some marginalia and corrections visible. The script is in a cursive style, characteristic of historical Persian manuscripts. The text appears to be a detailed account or a legal decree, given the formal nature of the language and the use of specific terminology. There are several lines of text at the top, followed by a large block of text in the center, and a few lines at the bottom. The text is written in black ink on aged, slightly discolored paper. The overall layout is typical of a single-page manuscript entry.
